

Soul service, no bull

Real devotion, indeed passion, maybe obsession, when combined with hard work deserves reward, in any field.

I read an article in the weekend paper titled ‘Soul Service’ about the singing sisters, Vika and Linda Bull, describing their YouTube singing appearances, Sunday Sing Songs.

What caught my imagination, and in some small way, my ideal form of teamwork was these two descriptive paragraphs in the newspaper:

“...A couple of weeks into the Sunday Sing Song routine, the barefooted sisters sat at Linda’s kitchen table to perform a remarkable a capella reading of Amazing Grace for Review’s isolation room video series.

“...Across three minutes their empathy, physicality and shared eye contact were on full display after taking one verse each, they lifted off in harmony together and scaled wicked heights in the hymn’s second half, prompting goosebumps, tears and gratitude from tens of thousands of viewers.”

A good to great bowls team / side might have parallel related features to this sister team.

Then I thought after reading this article, why not at least listen to the Bull sisters YouTube Sunday Sing Songs. So while preparing an evening meal I found the clips.

First I listened to two clips then, with dinner nearly all but prepared, I clicked onto the clip featuring Amazing Grace as it was reported to be remarkable.

It was so so bloody good my eyes watered, yeah goosebumps, two talents teaming together in total resonance, total bliss, total ecstasy. I was pumped. An outstanding example of a truly great team.

Readers, please go and listen to their clip of this song, amazing, really amazing. Revel in the beauty of the voices.

Listen and learn the lessons of each player, performer, contributing to what is a great team.
